From "CAMBRIDGE," illustrated by W. Matthison (A. & C. Black).

St. John's College is the second largest college of Cambridge, and was founded in 1511 on the site of St. John's Hospital, which dated from the 12th century. Part of its buildings overlook the river, which is spanned by two bridges belonging to the College, one a stone structure erected 1656, and the other a covered bridge called, from its resemblance to the famous bridge of Venice, "The Bridge of Sighs."
